The detectives point out that what they seek to eradicate is hard core pornography, but Mr. Benjamin defended the rights of adults to view whatever they choose. Cross-discussion resulted in what made obscenity a crime followed.

Reporter, Cynthia Glaser, relayed to viewers several stories of women in prison and details of the crimes they committed. Many attitudes of prisoners were displayed showing various emotions from sorrow for being in prison to sorrow for getting caught. The primary reason given for crimes committed was the need to have money for drugs. Repeat offenders told viewers that their lack of education and good work background was the cause for their return to crime. Prison officials stated that repeat offenders became manipulative and untrustworthy. Viewers are told to become involved in legislating good education for all and laws to prevent crime and punish repeat offenders.

	Jay Jones interviews Michael Larkin, Executive Director of the Anaheim YMCA, and former police officer. Answering Jay's question why crime is increasing and especially among the youth, Larkin says the biggest factor is the deterioration of the family. With both parents working, or have single parent families, and so many distractions, the youth are left alone with no one to talk to, and often no one to help them when arrested. Larkin points out that drugs or alcohol are linked to most crimes. Often they start with drugs as early as eight to ten years of age. He urges parents and communities to get involved and make the youth accountable to somebody. The occult and Satanic groups are attractive because they accept the lonely children.
